Join the effort to support and expand community radio

There are currently 800 low-power FM (LPFM) radio stations in the United States. These non-commercial stations give community groups, everyday citizens, church groups, and environmental organizations a chance to make their voices heard. These stations are a vital part of local media in many towns and cities. The Local Community Radio Act (HR 1147 and S. 592) would vastly increase that number by relaxing restrictions on the LPFMs.

Across the country people are coming together to demand expanded LPFM access. Come learn more about low-power radio and how to support make it a reality.
